COLLECTION M is a product line for illuminating interior spaces for different purposes. The collection is based on a modular system that provides flexibility in creation of the final product. The combination of the available elements /modules/, the variability of the installation types, and the array of finishing possibilities, enable numerous different models of luminaires. The shape, size and color of the elements vary. By combining these elements and features the desired product appearance is achieved. The user is given opportunity to modify the product design because the alternations are flexible. Thus the unique lamps in accordance with the client's affinity are developed. The luminaires can be manufactured as: ceiling /pendant/, wall, table or floor lighting.

Balkan Architectural Biennale – BAB is an architectural-cultural platform: BALKAN UNLIMITED that seeks to enlighten main topics in the field melting boundaries among Balkan countries connecting with global trends interdisciplinary. The overall topic of BAB 2017 is "Balkan Patterns in Architecture & Urbanism".

"Balkan Patterns in Architecture & Urbanism" seeks to enlighten various processes on Balkan territory that are related to urban development, urban planning, urban design and Architecture in whole, putting emphasis both on inner and outer crosscutting influences in theory and practice that are reflected in the city and regional development in Balkan and region. It brings together theorist, academics, researchers, professionals, practitioners and city developers to discuss future patterns and paths of urban and architectural development based on its historical development and wider integrative regional and global processes. BAB consists of multiple interconnected modules that seek to bound academia and practice in the field of architecture and urbanism aiming to make crucial qualitative changes in the field promoting tolerance, transparency and cultural synergy.

Conceptor: dr Tatjana Mrđenović, BAB commissioner

Although one may not be open to admit to it, virtually every practicing architect intimately believes that she has the right to her own system of interpretation of architecture. The constitution of a personal system of thinking is proving to be inevitable, in a time when all previous architectural doctrines can be considered as outdated. In everydayness of an ordinary life, behind every architectural doctrine, no matter how universal, the stern face of dogma will appear.

The history of knowledge about architecture can be seen through the history of spatial concepts, wrote Bernard Tschumi in 1975. As an architect – designer and theoretician, Tschumi inquires the realm of material-built architecture and its conceptual environment. From the dialectic ambiguity of this relationship, he concludes that architecture, as a phenomenon, is always insufficient and incomplete. It is missing – either a concept or a realization. The incapacity of architecture to be complete, neither as a pure concept, nor as a pure realistic creation (and especially not as a mixture of them) is in a specific way territorialized in the frames of what we consider as the Balkans. Architects working on this territory are operatively facing the ambivalent incompleteness of architecture. The theme of the exhibition of the III Balkan Architectural Biennale New Patterns in Architecture and Urbanism offers a platform for reading the Balkan patterns of displaying immanent architectural insufficiency in the process between a specific social reality and a utopian dream. We call all of you architects – entrepreneurs, professionals, artists and warriors to share your perspective and show your work.

dr Tatjana Stratimirović, architecture exhibition curator

Interior design is globally regarded as a part of a growing industry. However, it is important to pay attention that interior design is concerned as a category of luxury services market, so it is constantly subjected to ups and downs of the economy. On the other hand, this should not significantly affect and discourage professional designers, and including those who complete vocational schools in this area, because there are market and interest in this area at any moment.

On the contrary, the current economic situation should not discourage them but it should inspire the further development, expansion of possibilities and researching information on various topics. Our goal is to gather as many professional designers as possible, as well as students of vocational studies, manufacturers, traders, importers, and others in this field. The participants should focus on presenting their views on the current situation in the Balkans in terms of the perception of interior design, production of furniture, design and industrial design. The participants are invited to exhibit their works in the form of presentations of performed interior projects and realized furniture. After collecting all the works, Expert Commission will select and award three best works.
